For nearly 50 years, Mother Bear's pizza has been synonymous with awards. USA Today named it the "Best Pizza in Indiana" and the IU community voted it Best Pizza in Bloomington 10 years in a row through the IDS Best in Bloomington poll. Additionally, People Magazine named Mother Bear's one of America's Top Nine Pizzerias.

Ray McConn, an IU graduate, prides himself on keeping Mother Bear's close to the heart of the Bloomington and Indiana University communities.

Mother Bear's is famous for its specials and specialty pizzas. The most popular, especially among students, is the "Munchie Madness." Other specials include: Ten inch Tuesday, Thirsty Thursday, Lunch specials, and more!

The "Divine Swine" is the most famous specialty pizza. This meat lover's fantasy has every pizza topping imaginable: pepperoni, sausage, ham and bacon. If you are feeling more on the healthy side, try the house salad that is unique for its Goldfish cracker topping instead of croutons. The restaurant is always busy and packed with patrons, but you are guaranteed that your long wait will be rewarded.

By educating trailblazers like Marcellus Neal and Frances Marshall, the first Black man and woman to graduate IU respectively, Pulitzer-winning journalist Ernie Pyle and even the creators of Crest toothpaste Joseph Muhler and William Nebergall, IU has made a name for itself as an influential institution across many fields.

Indiana University was founded in 1820, originally named “State Seminary.” In 1828, the school was renamed to “Indiana College” before the name “Indiana University” was finally decided in 1838.

One of the most consequential presidents in IU’s history was Herman B Wells. During his tenure, which began in 1938, Wells expanded the campus from 137 acres to 1,800 acres. He supported the intellectual freedom of IU’s faculty and worked to advance racial equality by desegregat-ing IU’s campus. One of his first successes as president was desegregating the Indiana Memorial Union in the late 1930s, according to the 2001 edition of the Journal of the Indiana University Student Personnel Association.

In 1947, professor Alfred Kinsey generated controversy when he established what is now known as the Kinsey Institute for Research in Sex, Gender and Reproduction. Originally a zoologist studying wasps, Kinsey became interested in human sexuality and conducted 18,000 interviews in order to write a book. Although he received praise for his work, Kinsey also faced criticism, prompting then-IU President Herman B Wells to defend Kinsey on the basis of free speech.

In the 1970s, IU became known nationally for the Little 500 when “Breaking Away,” filmed in Bloomington, won an Oscar. The decade was great for sports, with the Indiana men’s swimming team winning the NCAA championship four times with help from team member Mark Spitz, who later won 7 Olympic gold medals. In 1976, the Indiana men’s basketball team won the NCAA championship after a perfect season, winning the championship again in 1981 and 1987.

In 1987, the iconic Sample Gates finished construction, becoming a gateway from Kirkwood Avenue to the edge of campus after nearly a century of failed plans to build an arch-like structure in the location.

Today, IU is home to 45,000 students with an endowment of $3.32 billion, a massive evolution from its 10 student enrollment when it began two centuries ago.

Hoosiers of the past: Noteworthy IU alumni

By Christy Avery

averycm@iu.edu | @christym_avery

Throughout the years, IU has been home to many students who have made significant contributions in all kinds of careers. From actors and advocates, to authors and entrepreneurs, here's a few people you might not have known were Hoosiers.

Meg Cabot

Born and raised in Bloomington, author Meg Cabot graduated from IU in 1991 with a degree in fine arts. During her time at IU, she studied art, lived in the Collins Living Learning Center and took a few writing workshops. She also worked at Viewpoint, a book and card store in College Mall. After graduation, she moved to New York City and began writing books. Throughout her career, Cabot has published more than 80 books, including the Princess Diaries series, which inspired two movie adaptations by Disney.

Laverne Cox

A four-time Emmy-nominated actress, producer and LGBTQ advocate, Laverne Cox studied dance at IU for two years on a scholarship before transferring to Marymount Manhattan College in New York. Cox has spoken at IU previously about her journey with gender identity and activism. Cox is best known for portraying Sophia Burset in the show "Orange is the New Black" and was the first trans woman of color to have a leading role in a scripted mainstream television show. She is also the first openly transgender actress to be nominated for an Emmy award.

Mark Cuban

Cuban graduated from IU in 1981 with a bachelor's degree in business. A former IU rugby player, Cuban started his career in business while he attended IU — opening a bar, starting disco lessons for sororities and paying for his junior year with a chain letter. Cuban is a billionaire entrepreneur, television personality and investor. He is featured as one of the main investors on the ABC series "Shark Tank". Cuban is the owner of the Dallas Mavericks professional basketball team of the National Basketball Association, and was ranked number 177 on the 2020 Forbes 400 list.

Cuban has supported IU endeavors in the past. In 2015 Cuban invested $5 million to start a sports media center in Assembly Hall, which was named in his honor. In 2020, Cuban donated $250,000 to the Indiana Daily Student's Black Voices section, which supports the voices and opinions of Black students.

He also in 2022 committed to matching every dollar raised for the IU Rugby Endowment.

Suzanne Collins

Author and television writer Suzanne Collins double majored in telecommunications and theater during her time at IU, receiving a bachelor's degree with distinction from the College of Arts and Sciences in 1985. Collins, who began her career in 1991 writing for children's television shows, is the author of the best-selling "Hunger Games" series, which has been adapted into four movies and sold millions of copies.

Calbert Cheaney

Calbert Cheaney is a retired American basketball player and current assistant coach for the Indiana Pacers. Cheaney grew up in Evansville, Indiana, playing multiple sports and quickly found his calling in basketball. At IU, he played small forward under head coach Bob Knight from 1989 to 1993. Cheaney spent 13 years total in the National Basketball Association, playing for six teams. After his career ended, he served as the director of basketball operations at IU from 2011 to 2013. A three-time All-American, Cheaney has been awarded multiple honors and remains the Big Ten's all-time leading scorer.

Colin Donnell

An actor and singer, Colin Donnell began his career at IU, performing in plays and musicals all four years. Donnell graduated from IU in 2005 with a bachelor of arts, after which he moved to New York City, where he made his Broadway debut in "Jersey Boys". Since, he has been part of multiple national stage tours, including "Wicked" and "Mamma Mia!", and has starred in multiple Broadway and off-Broadway productions. Besides theater, Donnell has also had roles in television shows, starring as Tommy Merlyn in "Arrow", Scotty Lockhart in "The Affair" and Connor Rhodes in "Chicago Med".

Dallas Mavericks owner Mark Cuban speaks to reporters after the Mavericks beat the Denver Nuggets on March 11, 2020, at American Airlines Center in Dallas.

Old Oaken Bucket and Old Brass Spittoon

By Griffin Healy
healygr@iu.edu | @TheGriffinHealy

The Indiana football program became an official piece of the university in 1887, and the team has developed rivalries, memorable seasons and iconic wins that will forever be cemented at Memorial Stadium in those decades since. With those developed rivalries come trophies that put the game at high stakes and continue traditions within the Big Ten. Here is a history of the two trophy games in which Indiana has participated:

Old Oaken Bucket (Purdue, 1925-)

Indiana competes with in-state rival Purdue for the Old Oaken Bucket. The concept of a trophy for the annual football game between the two schools first came in 1925 during a joint meeting of the Chicago chapters of the Indiana and Purdue alumni organizations.

During that meeting, Indiana alumnus Dr. Clarence Jones and Purdue alumnus Russel Gray were appointed to propose a suitable trophy. Later on, Jones and Gray recommended that an oak bucket be the trophy for the game, and the winner of the game get a bronze block to put on the bucket every year. The trophy was named after “The Old Oaken Bucket”, a poem by Samuel Woodworth, which describes the nostalgic scenes of his childhood.

Indiana and Purdue would end the first trophy game in a tie

0-0 on Nov. 25, 1925. The Boiler-makers beat the Hoosiers 24-14 on Nov. 20, 1926, to claim the old oaken bucket for the first time. Purdue leads the all-time series 75-42-6, winning last year’s Bucket game 44-7. Indiana last won the Bucket at Ross-Ade Stadium in 2019 by a score of 44-41.

Old Brass Spittoon (Michigan State, 1950-)

Indiana plays in a competition for the Old Brass Spittoon against Michigan State. The trophy first came to be when Gene McDermott, a Michigan State graduate, purchased a spittoon from an antique shop in Lansing, Michigan. McDermott obtained the trophy in order to avoid a loss against the Hoosiers. A week before that matchup, the Spartans knocked off the Fighting Irish of the University of Notre Dame. Michigan State bested Indiana 35-0 on Nov. 4, 1950, and the trophy game was born.

Unlike the Old Oaken Bucket, this game had not always been played annually until the conference expansion in 2011. The Spittoon was not awarded in 1971, 1972, 1979, 1980, 1999, 2000, 2009 and 2010, because Indiana and Michigan State were not yet in the same division.

Michigan State currently leads the series 49-15-2 and won the last matchup 20-15 at Memorial Stadium on Oct. 16, 2021. Indiana last won the Spittoon by a score of 24-0 at Spartan Stadium on Nov. 14, 2020.

A look at some of IU's statues

Herman B Wells

The Herman B Wells statue sits near Rose Well House, accompanied by three bronze benches. This bronze statue was created by sculptor Harold "Tuck" Langland in 2000, the same year Wells passed away. Wells was the 11th president of IU and the university's first chancellor. After his retirement as IU president in 1962, the IU Board of Trustees created a new position of university chancellor specifically for Wells. He brought IU to new heights through increased enrollment, new program offerings, campus beautification projects and all-around support of IU's faculty and students. The statue sits with his hand outstretched, welcoming visitors to shake his hand, take a seat and enjoy the scenery of IU's campus.

Ernie Pyle

Dressed in combat attire, the bronze Ernie Pyle statue sits at a typewriter outside Franklin Hall, right next to Sample Gates. The statue, installed in 2014, was created by Langland, the same artist who created the Herman B Wells statue. Pyle was a journalism student in the early 1920s, but he left IU just short of graduation to begin his reporting career. He is best known for being a war correspondent during World War II. His writing style set him apart from other journalists, as he wrote from the perspective of a common soldier and described how the war affected the soldiers. This type of writing style and reporting won Pyle a Pulitzer Prize for journalism in 1944.

Hoagy Carmichael

Tucked between the IU Auditorium and the Radio-Television Building, the statue of jazz musician Hoagy Carmichael plays the piano. The statue was created by sculptor Michael McAuley and installed in 2008. Carmichael was born in Bloomington and graduated from the IU Maurer School of Law. However, he didn't spend too much time as a lawyer, as he also got an honorary doctorate in music from IU. Carmichael composed hundreds of songs in his lifetime, including "Stardust," "Little Old Lady" and "Georgia on My Mind." The statue is depicted to be writing one of his famous songs "Memphis in June."

Kirkwood Avenue is seen Sept. 12, 2020.

By Lexi Lindenmayer
lindena@iu.edu | @lexilindenmayer

Kirkwood Avenue is the street at the heart of Bloomington. Beginning at the Sample Gates, the street is home to a wide variety of bars, restaurants and businesses for students and Bloomington residents to experience and enjoy.

Whether you are looking for breakfast, lunch or dinner, the restaurants on Kirkwood have you covered. Village Deli is a classic diner specializing in breakfast, burgers and sandwiches. If you are looking for a latte, smoothie or even a bakery item, make sure to stop at Soma Coffeehouse and Juice Bar.

FARMBloomington is known for its dishes served with locally grown food and global flavors. The menu even changes with the seasons, and there are always daily specials. If you are craving a Chicago-style hot dog, cheeseburger or deli sandwich, try Fat Dan's Deli.

Other beloved restaurants include international food establishments like Z & C Teriyaki & Sushi or the Trojan Horse and pizza from either Goodfellas Pizzeria or Cafe Pizzaria. Additionally, there are various food trucks parked up the street, such as Doner Kebab.

The Kirkwood bar scene includes Kilroy's on Kirkwood, the Upstairs Pub and Nick's English Hut. Places like Insomnia Cookie or Hartzell's Ice Cream will help your sweet tooth craving.

If you are looking for some entertainment after dinner, the Buskirk-Chumley Theater is a venue for local festivals and plays, touring musicians and film screenings. This year marks the theater's 100th year of business, and celebration events will begin in August and continue through May 2023.

There are various stores and shops up and down Kirkwood.

If you are wanting some IU apparel, try stores like Greetings or Tracks. Along with spiritwear, Tracks also sells a wide array of modern and old vinyl records.

Pitaya is a local boutique selling clothes, shoes and accessories. They stock their racks with fresh merchandise every week, so there are always new items to browse and purchase.

Along with these stores, Bicycle Garage Inc. is a full-service bicycle store and repair shop, offering bike rentals for passionate cyclists. Moon Stones sells handmade jewelry, as well as exotic rocks and crystals.

Limestone Legends: Historic IU traditions every student must know

By Sean Gilley
spgilley@iu.edu | @seanyg729

Whether you're an incoming freshman, parent or simply a visitor there's tons of information and history to soak up in your time on IU's campus. From time-tested traditions to championship-choosing legends, learn the more intriguing stories passed down through each graduating class.

The poached fish

When you visit Showalter fountain, you'll probably notice the statue of the outspread lady surrounded by smaller statues of fish in the center of the water. This depiction of the birth of Venus may even appear slightly off for those with a keen eye. This is because one of the five surrounding fish is a replica - replacing the fish stolen after the 1987 basketball championship.

Many speculate when the original statue may return. Some say it will find its way back to campus the next time IU wins a championship. Others argue this has cursed IU, and we will be unable to win another championship until the statue is returned.

The Wells touch

A short jaunt west of the fountain is the Herman B Wells statue outside of the Student Building. The model was designed by IU South Bend Professor Tuck Langland and unveiled October 21, 2000 - located on one of benches in the Old Crescent area on campus, just southwest of Owen Hall.

The statue portrays Wells smiling with an outstretched hand. The rumor goes that any student who shakes his hand will be endowed with academic luck, gaining the ability to ace a difficult exam they're stressing about.

The romance of the Rose Well House

This stone structure is one of the oldest on campus, built in 1908 and named after IU alumni Theodore F. Rose, class of 1875, who led the project in planning and funding. This quickly became a historically romantic spot for undergrads to meet after hours due to its central location between the old men's and women's dorms.

Many say those who kiss under this beautiful structure at midnight are bonded for life. Now, this is a widely popular spot for marriage proposals and weddings, featuring many private ceremonies for various IU alums all year long.

College of Arts and Sciences

The College dates back to the founding of IU in 1820 and is now home to more than 120 departments, programs, institutes and centers. It offers more than 80 majors, ranging from art history to chemistry. The College also houses the Eskenazi School of Art, Architecture + Design, the Hamilton Lugar School of Global and International Studies, and the Media School.

Kelley School of Business

The Kelley School of Business evolved from the School of the Commerce and Finance, which was established in 1920. The business school was named after E. W. Kelley, an alumnus of the school that is credited for the modern-day success of the Indianapolis-based restaurant chain Steak 'n Shake. Today, the business school offers many top-rated programs.

Eskenazi School of Art, Architecture + Design

First known as the School of Art + Design, the art school was founded in 2016 and is now part of the College of Arts and Sciences. The school shares a namesake with the Eskenazi Museum of Art, thanks to donations of Indianapolis-based philanthropists Sidney and Lois Eskenazi.

School of Education

The School of Education formed in 1923 after the Department of Education separated from the College of Arts and Sciences. The school offers programs for education, counseling and school psychology.

Hamilton Lugar School of Global and International Studies

Established in 2012, the international school offers majors focused on international policies, cultures and languages. The school is named after former U.S. Rep. Lee H. Hamilton and former U.S. Sen. Richard G. Lugar, who both received the Presidential Medal of Freedom.

Luddy School of Informatics, Computing, and Engineering

The then-named School of Informatics was founded in 2000 and has since been joined by several different IU departments to become the school it is today. The school is named after American billionaire and former IU student

Fred Luddy, who, in 2019, gifted the second-largest private donation in IU's history.

The Media School

One of IU's newest schools, the Media School was founded in 2014 after the IU Board of Trustees voted to merge the College's Department of Telecommunications and the School of Journalism, which was founded in 1974. Today, the Media School offers programs in journalism, media studies and game design.

Jacobs School of Music

In 1921, the Department of Music became the then-named School of Music after the department was founded 11 years prior. After a more than $40 million donation in 2005 from Barbara Jacobs, the wife of IU alumnus and businessman David H. Jacobs. The school offers programs in different aspects of music, from vocal performance to ballet.

School of Nursing

Founded in 1914, the School of Nursing is one of the largest nursing schools in the nation, spanning three of IU's campuses. The Bloomington campus offers an undergraduate degree in nursing.

Paul H. O'Neill School of Public and Environmental Affairs

The O'Neill School, founded in 1972, combines public policy management with environmental sciences and is a top rated school for public affairs. The school was named after IU alumnus Paul H. O'Neill in 2019, who served as the United States Secretary of the Treasury.

School of Public Health-Bloomington

The School of Public Health focuses on the instruction about disease prevention and wellness, offering programs from nutrition sciences to recreational therapy. The school was founded in 2012 after health and wellness courses existed at the university since the 19th century.

School of Social Work

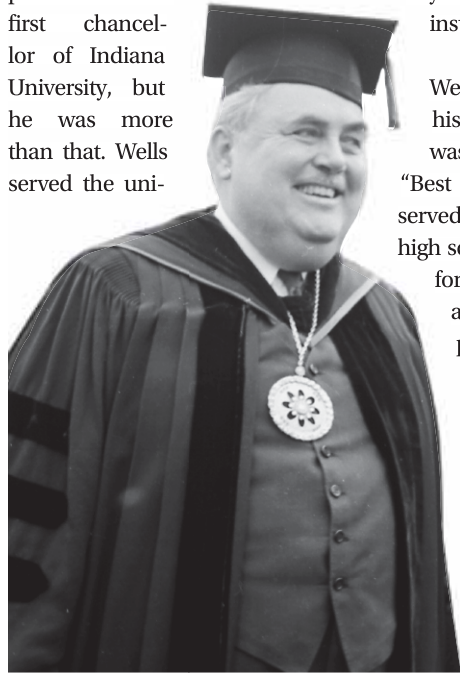

The School of Social Work allows students to study social work, enabling them to seek careers in schools, hospitals, prisons and more. The Department of Social Service was founded in 1911 and was made into an independent academic unit following the increased need for social workers following World War II.

versity, its faculty and its students in many different capacities to transform a once small and locally focused college into a nationally ranked and accredited institution.

Born on June 7, 1902, Wells was very active in his high school, where he was voted “Funniest” and “Best All-Around Boy”. He served as the treasurer for his high school’s yearbook, wrote for the school newspaper and took part in theater productions and various fundraisers.

Wells initially attended the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign before transferring to Indiana University Bloomington after his freshman year. He then went on to receive his bachelor’s degree in commerce in 1924 and, later, a master’s degree in economics, also from IU.

He began teaching economics at IU in 1930 until then-IU president William Lowe Bryan appointed Wells as dean of what would become the Kelley School of Business. Wells was Bryan’s protégé and would later succeed him as the university’s president in 1937 following Bryan’s unexpected departure.

It was under Wells’ presidency that the university expanded and prospered. Through his lobbying efforts in Congress and Indiana’s State Legislature, as well as his fundraising campaigns among alumni and local business, he was able to undertake what he considered the “greatest single period of expansion” in the history of the university, according to his autobiography.

Wells led the development of 15 new buildings, attracted a large cohort of new faculty and budding scholars, broadened university arts and science programs and developed the university’s international study programs. Following the end of World War II, Wells also fought to end institutional segregation, to advance academic and intellectual freedom, and to protect the local environment on and around campus.

After his retirement as president in 1962, Wells was appointed to the specially created position of chancellor. He held this position — overseeing special projects, fundraising and advising the university — until his death in 2000. Although no longer with us, the fruit of his labor will continue to bloom long into the future.

The history of Indiana women's basketball

The Indiana women's basketball team has been one of the school's most successful programs in recent years. The Hoosiers are coming off of back-to-back Sweet 16 appearances and their seventh consecutive 20-win season. Still, it took more than 100 years for the program to catch up to the prominence of men's sports at the university and gain the level of recognition that it has today.

Women's basketball first officially came to IU in 1890 through the Department of Physical Training for Women curriculum. During its earliest years, the team practiced in the basement of Wylie Hall, formerly a chemistry building. The sole gymnasium for women provided rough conditions, including low ceilings, support beams on the court and chemical fumes from the labs upstairs.

Miss Juliette Maxwell, the first director of the Department of Physical Training for Women, played an instrumental role in the advancement of the women's athletics program. Maxwell worked tirelessly to improve the conditions of the women's basketball team and helped in moving the gymnasium to Mitchell Hall and later the Student Building.

The women began to develop an interclass competition system, where an honorary varsity team was named at the conclusion of a tournament at the end of the year. Interest in women's athletics grew over the years, and the university joined a formal athletic association to organize and promote women's sports: the Women's Athletic Association.

Despite the boom of the WAA, participation in basketball was looked down upon because of the public sentiment that women should only play feminine sports. By the end of the 1920s, masculinization and over-competition was a fear of many, including First Lady Mrs. Herbert Hoover. Her efforts to reduce the competitive nature of women's sports led to the installation of "Play Days," an emphasis on friendly fellowship in athletics.

Still, basketball culture thrived at IU. The university hosted Play Days for both undergraduates and high school athletes across the state — the

By Ethan Moore

ethmoore@iu.edu | @ethmoore

A well-known name for most people, the Nobel Prize recognizes some of the most important and impactful academics and creatives around the world. Founded in 1901, the Nobel Foundation awards prizes in physics, chemistry, literature, physiology or medicine, peace, and economic sciences.

IU cites nine Nobel Prize winners that have been affiliated with the university, whether as faculty members or as alumni. Here are a few of the more recent Hoosier winners.

Elinor Ostrom - Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences (2009)

Ostrom was a long-time faculty member of IU's Department of Political Sciences, first coming to IU as a visiting assistant professor in 1965, the same year she received her Ph.D. in political science from UCLA.

She went on to become a professor in 1974 and served as co-director and co-founder of the Workshop in Political Theory and Policy Analysis from 1973-2009.

In 2009, Ostrom won the Nobel Prize for her research which "demonstrated how common property can be successfully managed by user associations and that economic analysis can shed light on most forms of social organization," according to the Nobel Prize's website. She was the first woman to win the prize in Economic Sciences and she shared the prize with Oliver Williamson. She died in 2012.

Riccardo Giacconi - Nobel Prize in Physics (2002)

Giacconi was an Italian physicist who pioneered X-ray astronomy. In 1956, he traveled to the United States to work with physics professor R. W. Thompson at IU, made possible by a Fullbright scholarship. He left for Princeton University in 1958.

Gicconni won the Nobel Prize in 2002 for her career contributions to astrophysics, as his work with X-ray astronomy led him to discover that outer space holds a vast array of X-ray sources, from black holes to neutron stars.

Ferid Murad - Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine (1998)

Murad, a native of Whiting, Indiana, attended DePauw University and took summer courses at one of IU's regional campuses while working to earn money for his tuition. After graduation, he earned a doctorate in pharmacology from Case Western Reserve University in addition to his medical degree.

Murad won the Nobel Prize in 1998 for discovering that nitric oxide makes blood vessels relax, which laid the groundwork for modern applications in medicine like regulating blood pressure and fighting infections and cancer.

women of Indiana took every chance they could get to play the game they loved. Sororities, dorms and other unofficial women's organizations competed in games across campus on the daily.

In 1949, the Women's Recreational Organization took over the management of women's athletics on campus. It expanded the basketball program into tiers — a Play Day level, intramural level and advanced competitive level — that women could join based on skill, experience and interest.

At first, the Indiana women's basketball extramural team, the most competitive of the three levels, was unable to join the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women due to budget restraints. The approaching approval of Title IX in the early 1970s made it clear that the university needed to find the money to allow the women's team to compete. IU eventually created sufficient room in the budget, and the women's varsity basketball team began their first official season in 1971.

The Hoosiers joined the Big Ten in 1982, when they notched a 15-3 conference record and claimed their first Big Ten title. They appeared in five NCAA Tournaments before head coach Teri Moren, then in her fourth year in Bloomington, led Indiana to a WNIT Tournament Championship in 2018.

The Hoosiers have qualified for the three NCAA Tournaments since, with an Elite Eight appearance in 2021 and Sweet Sixteen appearance in 2022. Indiana women's basketball has made significant strides over the past decade alone and is on pace to become one of the most successful and well-known programs in all of women's basketball history.

Nature on IU's campus

By Lexi Lindenmayer

lindena@iu.edu | @lexilindenmayer

People claim that IU has one of the prettiest campuses, with its limestone buildings and brick trails. However, a major part of that beauty has to do with the nature and greenery students can see on their walk to class. Here are three historic spots that are beautiful, green and located right on IU's campus.

Dunn Meadow

Bordering Seventh Street and Indiana Avenue, Dunn Meadow is a large grassy expanse behind the Indiana Memorial Union. The name "Dunn" comes from Samuel Dunn Jr. and Elizabeth Grundy, who came to Bloomington in 1823 and established a large farm on what makes up a big part of campus.

Dunn Meadow is mainly open grass, but there are also many trees that surround the flat area. It is located next to a section of Campus River, which adds to the ambience.

As a whole, Dunn Meadow is often used as a place for concerts, festivals, conventions and protests. Students also often use the area to have fun and relax, whether that is setting up a hammock or playing a game of frisbee.

Dunn's Woods

Dunn's Woods is the wooded area right on IU's eastern side of campus. Surrounding the woods are multiple historic buildings in IU's Old Crescent like Bryan Hall, Owen Hall and Swain Hall.

There are multiple red-bricked trails through the woods, allowing students to walk directly through the tall trees on their way to class or just to take in the scenery. Some students even opt to study among all the greenery and animals.

Cox Arboretum

The former home of the Little 500 and the Indiana Memorial Union, the Cox Arboretum now sits as a staple and historic area on IU's campus. The arboretum is named after Jesse H. and Beulah Chanley Cox, a couple who created a legacy of hard work, generosity and perseverance, according to the Cox Scholars Program webpage. They are responsible for the largest gift IU has ever received by an individual: $92 million.

Between Wells Library and the School of Public Health, the Cox Arboretum is 174 acres of trees, shrubs and specialty gardens. Students can walk the area, lay out and study or bike along the numerous trails.

A gazebo overlooks the multiple paths and a pond. In the center of the area is the 91-foot tall, 61-bell tower known as the Metz Carillon. The carillon was named after Dr. Arthur R. Metz, a successful physician and strong financial supporter of IU.

Little 500:

What you need to know about the world's Greatest College Weekend

The Melanzana bike team hoists the Little 500 trophy up on the podium after winning the Women's Little 500 on April 22, 2022, at Bill Armstrong Stadium. Melanzana was presented with two trophies and a Little 500 bike.

By Austin Platt

auplatt@iu.edu | @austinplatter15

The most exciting weekend in Bloomington came back with a bang in 2022. Now that everyone has experienced in-person race days, the excitement and countdown to the third weekend in April 2023 has already begun.

For any incoming freshmen and anyone else who, like me, had never heard of the Little 500 before coming to campus, here is the rundown.

The Little 500 is a bike race modeled after the Indianapolis 500 that features teams of four undergraduate riders that race around the track at Bill Armstrong Stadium — the home of Indiana men's and women's soccer. If you've seen "Breaking Away," the 1979 Academy Award winner for best original screenplay, then you've seen and learned about the race team Cutters, who has won the event a record 14 times. Most teams are either associated with a dorm building or a Greek life house.

IU Foundation Executive Director Howdy Wilcox Jr. whose father Howard won the Indy 500 in 1919, started the race in 1951 after he saw students racing each other around the dorms. 37 years later, the inaugural women's race was founded after the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority fell one place short of qualifying for the race the year prior. Both Little 500 races are now under the direction of the IU Student Foundation.

The women's race, normally held on a Friday, is 100 laps long along the quarter-mile cinder track. The men's race occurs a day later, on Saturday, and is 200 laps long.

Qualifications, or "quals" for short, is the first piece of Little 500 competition and is typically held in late March. Qualls is a big day in its own right, as each team attempts to put down a time to place within the top-33 and fraternities, sororities and other students wake up at the crack of dawn to cheer on their teams.

Each rider finishes a lap and then must complete a successful exchange. Otherwise, they fail and must try again. If a team can't complete four clean laps after three tries, they will not be allowed to participate on race day. The times in quals decide where everyone starts the race, and the top team gets to qualify on the pole and wear the green jersey for the race.

There are other pre-race events involving all the riders, known as the Spring Series. These festivities don't change the order of the Little 500, but do serve as valuable practice for the riders. The best overall team after the four events gets to wear a white jersey for race day.

The team that wins the year prior gets to wear a yellow jersey. In 2022, Melanzana Cycling won the women's race for the first time, and Phi Delta Theta won the men's race for the fourth time in their fraternity's history.

All money raised by the IU Student Foundation is used to support scholarship funds. The IUSF has handed out more than $2 million to undergraduate students.

The 35th edition of the women's race is scheduled for Friday April 21, 2023, and the 72nd running of the men's race will be held Saturday April 22, 2023.

The main pack of bikers round turn two early in the Men's Little 500 April 23, 2022, at Bill Armstrong Stadium. The men's race is 200 laps.

The story of the Sample Gates

How one of IU's most iconic landmarks came to be

By Meghana Rachamadugu
megracha@iu.edu

The Sample Gates is an iconic pair of arches that form the entrance to the Old Crescent — the oldest part of IU's campus, built between 1884 and 1908. Edson Sample funded the construction project in 1987 and dedicated it to his parents, Louise Waite Sample and Kimsey Ownbey Sample Sr.

In 1883, when Indiana University relocated from South College Avenue and South Morton Street to Kirkwood Avenue, students and faculty wanted to build a gateway for the campus entrance.

Alumni from 1899-1902 created the Arch Fund, but Theodore Rose, from the class of 1875, was already planning a gateway. The Arch Fund was instead used for chimes in the Student Building.

In June 1904, Rose showed his proposal to the IU Board of Trustees, who decided Rose's plan involved too-narrow arches that would block the entrance to campus. The materials were repurposed for the Rose Well House in 1908.

In 1932, Newell Sanders proposed a gateway to honor the class of 1873. Three years later, architectural revisions were made to accommodate the surrounding campus's aesthetic.

Over 35 years, alumni and various firms submitted 10 designs for the gates.

In 1961, Eggers & Higgins suggested a gothic style "Fifth Street Gateway," which is the one we see on campus today. However, the design wasn't approved until 1968. In 1987, the Sample Gates finished construction at last.

"The gates stand as a monument to those who have gone before us, to the work and vision of all who've helped to bring this university to greatness," former IU president John Ryan said at the dedication ceremony, according to Pride at IU.

Today, the Sample Gates is one of the most popular spots on campus for students, families and others. It's also a very popular photo spot for both recent graduates and incoming freshmen.

"The Sample Gates, both into the campus and from the campus into the community... are not two paths, but one. For me, it is a coming in, never a going out," Vice President Kenneth Gros Louis said at the dedication ceremony of the Sample Gates in 1987.

A Guide to visiting the Eskenazi Museum of Art

By Grant Wheeler
grawheel@iu.edu

Located just north of Showalter Fountain, the Sidney and Lois Eskenazi Museum of Art is easily one of the most stunning buildings on campus. Housing thousands of artworks that span centuries and continents, the museum features numerous exhibits across its three floors.

Admission to the museum is free, and the galleries can be visited between noon and 5 p.m.

Tuesday through Sunday.

The iconic building was designed by I.M. Pei, the architect behind the Louvre, and is known for its lack of right angles. The unique space adds a grandiose feeling to the atmosphere and makes it feel as though the building itself were part of the exhibit.

The collections on display come from all over the world, containing art ranging from ancient Sumer to East Asia to Oceania. Some exhibits display works from 30,000 B.C.E., while others feature art from the 2010s.

In its 75 years, the Eskenazi museum's collection has accumulated roughly 45,000 works, displaying about 1,000 of them at a time. Exhibition is not the collection's only purpose, however. The museum is intensely dedicated to the conservation of its works, with a full team of conservators working to keep the art in good shape. Visitors can see this team at work in the Conservation Studio, as well as attend occasional guest lectures in the Conservation Analytical Laboratory.

The Eskenazi museum also provides therapeutic services centered around art. With programs based in art therapy and wellness, the museum provides important, if often-overlooked, mental health services to the IU and Bloomington communities. Visitors can take part in Open Studios on the last Wednesday of each month during the academic year from 1-4 p.m.

Visitors explore exhibits Nov. 7, 2019, at the Eskenazi Museum of Art.

Indiana basketball heads into season with championship expectations

By Emma Pawlitz

epawlitz@iu.edu | @emmapawlitz

The 2022-2023 basketball season is shaping up to be one for the books on both the Indiana men's and women's sides.

NCAA Tournament wins at the end of the 2021-2022 season and the return of many key players within both programs will make the Hoosiers squads must-watch teams. Fans will get a sneak peak at both teams during Hoosier Hysteria on October 7 — the Friday of homecoming weekend — with the annual preseason event featuring 3-point, skills and dunk contests. Amid all the fanfare, the Hoosier faithful will have a lot to get excited about.

The Indiana men's basketball program has already received a lot of preseason hype. The Hoosiers are ranked No. 15 in the ESPN Way-Too-Early Top 25 men's college basketball rankings and have generated a prolific amount of buzz in regards to winning the Big Ten in 2022-2023 ever since senior forward Trayce Jackson-Davis announced his return to Bloomington.

In addition to Jackson-Davis, fifth-year seniors Race

Thompson and Xavier Johnson — both integral parts of the Hoosiers' success in the 2021-2022 season — will return to the team. Indiana also has 247 Sports' No. 8 incoming recruiting class, with ESPN top-25 ranked freshmen Jalen Hood-Schifino and Malik Reneau.

Head coach Mike Woodson, now in his second year, has quickly become a fan-favorite with his strong emphasis on player accountability and development. Woodson led the Hoosiers to notable wins over the ranked likes of Purdue, Ohio State and Illinois, along with their first NCAA Tournament appearance since 2016.

On the other side, Indiana women's basketball has been one of the most successful programs at IU and in the nation in recent years. Head coach Teri Moren is coming off of her eighth year with the program and seventh consecutive 20-win season.

The Hoosier women will hope to continue their success from an Elite Eight appearance in 2021 and a Sweet 16 showing in 2022. Both of Indiana's last two NCAA Tournament runs were halted by the eventual runner-up — the University of Arizona in 2021 and the University of Connecticut in 2022.

The women's program will return its top-two leading scorers, fifth-year senior Grace Berger and senior Mackenzie Holmes, and will add a slew of skilled new players. University of Oregon transfer Sydney Parrish, Providence College transfer Alyssa Geary and Minnesota transfer Sara Scalia will add valuable experience to the program alongside incoming freshmen Lexus Bargesser, Yarden Garzon, Henna Sandvik and Lilly Meister.

Campus through the seasons

IU is ranked among the most beautiful college campuses in the country. Visitors can enjoy the scenery any time of year.

FALL The Sample Gates are located in the Old Crescent area of campus. During the fall months, the trees provide a colorful canopy here and across campus. Landscape Services maintains the changing seasonal displays of flowers throughout the campus. In autumn temperatures range with highs in the 60s-70s and lows in the 40s-50s.

WINTER The Campus River that runs through IU reflects a snowy landscape. Average high temperatures during the winter months are in the 30s and lows are in the 20s, but they go lower — and can feel much lower with a wind chill.

SUMMER The Arboretum is a popular place for visitors to stroll through. Summer in Bloomington can be hot and humid with average highs in the 80s. Average lows are in the 60s.

SPRING Tulips blooming around the Sample Gates are a colorful sight every spring. At the beginning of May, new graduates are often seen getting their photos taken around the flowers. During the spring, temperatures range from the 50s to the 70s.

IU Credit Union is committed to campus and community.

IU Credit Union has a strong commitment to the communities we serve. We offer $33,000 in scholarships annually, donate to community charitable organizations, and sponsor campus and community programs that encompass education, arts, athletics, and general community needs. Go to iucu.org/communitymatters to learn more.

We started a credit union and created a community.
