ART 1 STUDENTS CREATE MONOCHROMATIC PORTRAIT PAINTINGS FROM PHOTOS

"It can be anything, you could do that with any subject and they are beautiful when they're done," art teacher Sandra Sexton said. Middle school Art 1 students painted self portraits with only one color to use.

Sandra's Art 1 class created the monochromatic portrait paintings from a photo of themselves. The artists first chose a recent or childhood photo. They then posterized the photo through a program on the computer.

The students started painting with their lighter colors. Then continued to add paint darkening the color little by little as they painted more areas. Depending on how fast the student worked and the size of the photo, the projects were finished in about a week. copy: c. davis

She's the Face of Art. Art teacher, Sandra Sexton helps Jackson Burnett (10) with ideas to finish his project. After 12 years of teaching at this school, Sandra has decided to retire. "I was amazed how beautiful some of the portraits were, I mean absolutely beautiful," Sandra said. photo: c. davis
