

Labor Day gave all students and staff the day off from school to take a much needed break.

"I was able to enjoy the extra day off by going out to eat with my parents. I also got some necessary studying done."

Jonathan Ferrell
senior

"I took a break from my usual school and dance. It was so fun to spend more time with my friends."

Lauren Bradley
senior

"I used this opportunity to get some extra hours in at work at Amy's Ice Cream."

Madison Brannies

The annual college fair was a district-wide event giving students the opportunity to learn about 120 different colleges.

"College Fair was super informative. I got to look at NYU, which was really cool since it's one of my top choices."

Sarah Collier
senior

"The fair gave me more insight into which colleges I consider a good fit for me."

Annie Feng
junior

"I got to help organize the college representatives and their stations. They were really friendly."

welcoming the new school year

The school hosted its annual open house, an event where students and their families are welcomed to meet teachers and learn about the various clubs and programs offered here. A few members of student council took over the responsibility of watching several of the teacher's children during the event.

"I really enjoyed hanging out with the kids rather than the usual Student Council duties," senior Zoe Gamble said. "We had snacks, games, and Just Dance to fill the three hours we were with the kids."

Jam Packed

students face week full of events

The week following Labor Day had both the students and staff's schedules booked with extracurricular activities planned every day of the week. From the district-wide college fair, open house, and a variety of sport events, students had no shortage on things to do after school.

The varsity football game at Leander's Bible Stadium happened on Thursday night, leaving students with a late arrival home on a school night. This unusual switch complicated schedules even further since students didn't have the weekend to recover. However it left volleyball without any worry to compete against the usual Friday night football crowd.

midweek matchup

The unusual schedule left JV football to have their game on Wednesday, however it didn't affect the players' pre-game routine. Released early from class, players headed to the locker room with their game-day equipment prepared, then grabbed their provided food from the 200 building. Getting ready from there, they put on their uniform and gear and waited for the other team to show up.
