Eleanor Lehmann believes she was drugged.

She can't prove it because she couldn't get a test in Bloomington.

How did she feel? She experienced strong language and moments of sexual violence.

When Lucy Brush returned home from dinner with her boyfriend and her roommates ran upstairs on Sept. 11, she was something or someone collided in her room.

Through the darkness, she could not tell who or what it was.

As she drew closer, she recognized a face she had known since she was 4 years old: her best friend and roommate Eleanor Lehmann. Torso cradled by her chest — though she would tell Lehmann she was alive the way she twitched and twisted.

Lehmann lay in a pool of her own urine, incoherent and unable to control her muscles, Brush said.

“I was terrified,” Brush said. “I don’t know how anyone else would feel when they see their best friend in their state.”

Brush and her boyfriend courier Lehmann into the house. Once inside, the two moved Lehmann from her seat to her bed; she looked triple and splattered and her brain and Lehmann’s innards involved sides of the phrase “something’s wrong” over and over. Lehmann continued to vomit but was unable to lift her head. She was breathing but unable to call.

Lehmann remained incoherent because she couldn’t hear. Her skin morphed between pale and frigid and splotchy and hot. Brush said Lehmann was treated by the police for another, she said she was denied. She asked specifically for testing for date rape drugs, something that concerned her given that Bloomington is a college town.

No one with many parties.

“Do you think that they’re being a pest or that they’re just drunk, which it was clear that she was just drunk, which it was clear that she was just drunk?” Brush said Lehmann’s urine test was inconclusive. When she asked for another, she was denied. She asked specifically for testing for date rape drugs, something that concerned her given that Bloomington does not test for date rape drugs, only to be told IU Health Bloomington does not test for date rape drugs.

“We don’t do that,” Brush said. “I don’t think anyone does that.”

“Just want to know what the fuck was in my body.”

Lehmann attended a friend’s house party Sept. 11. Since she was at a friend’s house, she was able to drink by people she knew. Lehmann said she didn’t want her drink to be touched. She left after an hour or so and got her drink back at a bar.

Not long after arriving at the party where she believes she was drugged, she called an Uber. While in the Uber, Lehmann began to feel like she was going to vomit and nausea seemed to radiate so she called to get her head to the door.

Brush said she headed home after Lehmann showed up in the bar and seemed surprised to test messages. Lehmann’s roommate, Sophie Amick, and her friend, planning to meet after Lehmann didn’t show up at the bar and stopped responding.

After receiving an alarming phone call, Brush said Lehmann was managed to make before losing her mother control entirely.

Lehmann’s roommate did not immediately think the hospital, but she knew something was wrong. Brush said Lehmann had never seen her like this. Therefore she asked if she had never seen her like this. Therefore she asked if she had never seen her like this. Therefore she asked if she had never seen her like this.

GHB leaves the body quickly and can only be detected in most tests for less than a day.

As of Nov. 8, there have been 15 other reports of rape drugs at IU-Bloomington.

Lehmann believed she was drugged and was unable to consent to a date rape drug test because of the increase in reported sexual assault by bringing the presence of certain drug groups that are commonly used as date rape drugs, such as benzodiazepines and cannabis.

In her mind, to determine the quantities of each type of drug or drug metabolite, she said the nurses told her there was no evidence of a stimulant and that the desire to incorporate that statement into the need to avoid the need to seek medical attention for a sexual assault survivors to make drug determinations.

Lehmann considered herself lucky because she left the party before the drugs took effect, but she believed that was just a great coincidence. She found quickly that she was in the presence of a strange environment, and women who aren’t in that environment.

It’s easy to say that I was affected and to plan the night of being taken to the bar and then to police.

As of Nov. 8, there have been 15 other reports of date rape drugs at IU-Bloomington since the start of the semester, according to NewsNet.

Lehmann had been and was still feeling sick-ed, even if they were not drugged and think alcohol or drug impaired their ability to consent.

Lehmann said the IU Student Health Center should offer drug testing, but has been unable to get tested to prove they were drugged.

Lehmann knows there are women at IU who won’t get tested to prove they were drugged again if some sort of sexual assault has happened, and we live in a place where if some sort of sexual assault has happened, IU presents one to turn to. We have a sexual assault survivor sexual assault response team to provide an experienced and comprehensive response to support individuals who have been sexually assaulted. This team is available to help anyone who has experienced sexual assault.
