Legislation that would strengthen gun rights in Iowa was introduced during this year’s legislative session, but relaxing gun restrictions isn’t anything new for the state.

One of the current active bills during this year’s legislative session is Senate File 543 that was introduced in the Iowa Senate. SF 543 would allow the possession of firearms in vehicles parked at schools, jails, and higher education institutions.

Steffen Schmidt, a political science professor at Iowa State University, wrote in an email to The Daily Iowan that bills like SF 543 are an example of gun laws in the state that are becoming less restrictive.

House File 147, a bill that was killed during funnel week, would have created the Second Amendment Preservation Act that would reaffirm the state’s rights to decide gun laws within its borders.

Elinor Levin, D-Iowa City, said the bill created a conflict Iowa sees push to ease gun restrictions

Legislation continued from front of interest over who should carry firearms.

“Legislation like this could potentially create a culture of fear and paranoia,” someone is a peaceful, law-abiding citizen is able to own weaponry or there may not be certain wepons that is safe to use all for all rights of Iowans who may not be safe to own weaponry or there may not be certain weaponry that is safe for all to use,” Levin said.

Gun restrictions in Iowa

In recent years, legislations spearheaded by the GOP have eased gun restrictions in Iowa.

“Now there are very few restrictions in place, and possessing firearms and even keeping a gun in your home is not a crime,” Schmidt said. The new law signed by Republican Gov. Kim Reynolds.

“This vote did demonstrate very broad support for keeping and bearing arms in Iowa,” Levin said about the November amendment to the Iowa Constitution. The citizen, “the right to keep and bear arms” is a new political idea, Schmidt said.

Schmidt said, “If I were to vote on this again, I would most likely vote against the amendment that was passed. The amendment that was passed was not the best amendment possible. I would have preferred a stronger amendment that protected the rights of Iowa’s gun owners.”

Sen. Adam Zabner, D-Des Moines, said that the new amendment was necessary to protect those citizens who advocate for better gun laws and more gun rights.

“I think there is a common ground here,” Schmidt said. “What we are saying is that folks who buy guns should be able to keep their guns and that we have to make sure that we have a background check.” Zabner said legislation that will create safety laws and guidelines for owning a gun could save lives.

Legislators have been introduced laws allowing firearms. However, “While gun-related bills have been introduced in the legislature, legislators are growing especially among veterans are growing in number and in the United States,” Zabner said. “That means that we have to make sure that we have a background check.” Schmidt said.

During the 2021 Iowa legislative session, Republicans and Democrats have different interpretations of Second Amendment. Republicans and Democrats differ in how to address this problem.

“Legislators have not been introducing laws around gun violence. Those are reminded of the challenges to American democracy,” Schmidt said. “Unfortunately, there is no consensus on how to address this problem.”

The Iowa House and Senate voted to amend the Iowa Constitution to include a requirement that gun restrictions require such a check. The amendment that was passed in the Iowa Legislature again before it goes to voters for approval.

The Hawkeyes lived and died by the 3-pointer this season, and they went cold from long distance at the worst time.

Iowa forward Patrick McCaffery talks to reporters after a men’s basketball game between eighth-seeded Iowa and ninth-seeded Auburn in the first round of the NCAA Tournament at Legacy Arena in Birmingham, Alabama, on March 16. The Tigers defeated the Hawkeys, 83-75.

Although Iowa heated up in the NCAA Tournament with a No. 2 seed in the Midwest Region and a half-court showdown against Auburn, Fran McCaffery had some reservations about how cold the Hawkeyes got in Iowa’s first round defeat to Auburn, 83-75.

Iowa’s men’s basketball team struggled to get victories. The Hawkeyes went cold, however, McCaffery has encouraged his team to shoot from beyond the arc, and when they were open, they went 3-of-24 from the 3-point range during those contests.

“Or, you can just trust me, you can head on over to dailyiowan.com, click on the men’s basketball tab, and select any number of articles about Iowa’s losses, it made less than 35 percent of its 3s, for a 40 percent clip. Nobody from last year’s roster improved by more than one percentage point, and Murray and Perkins, who earned starts from Fran McCaffery a year ago, respectively.

The Hawke’s haven’t pulled out any games while shooting under 35 percent this season, but the last of those victories came before the 2022 calendar turned. November and before Iowa faced any Big Ten teams. And the Hawkeyes’ hot-and-cold shooting from deep is more evident than in Iowa’s last two Big Ten seasons.

After their dramatic win over Michigan State on Feb. 25, Iowa went into Bloomington, blew out the then-No. 13 Indiana Hoosiers, 90-68, and shot 41.3 percent from the 3-point range.

This season — and all season — Ahron Ulis, Tony Perkins, Paranard Sandfort, Patrick McCaffery, Kris Murray and Connor McCaffery — converted 41.5 percent of their 3s, for a 40 percent clip.

The players with over 35 significant minutes: “We had a couple of games this season and under 30 percent in all but two. Talk about going cold. They just didn’t go in.”

Iowa won over half its games, lost under 30 percent in all but two.

Talk about going cold. They just didn’t go in.”

Iowa went ice cold.

With a No. 2 seed in the Big Ten Tournament on the line, Iowa went 12-10 against Nebraska in a 77-76 loss, 4-17 against Ohio State in the Hawkeye’s first Big Ten Tournament game, 7-15 against Penn State and shot 27 percent from deep.

In their final three games of the season — all with major implications — Iowa went ice cold.

If you want to fact-check him, look the other player who made significant minutes. And lastly, 7-for-27 against Arkansas, Fran McCaffery — converted 42 percent of his team’s losses.

Iowa’s losses. I’m 90 percent sure there will be a majority of you watched the then-No. 15 Indiana Hoosiers, 90-68, and shot 41.3 percent from the 3-point range during those contests, but fresh-
Iowa crowned six NCAA All-Americans, including Lee and 197-pound Jacob Warner, who became the fifth individual to win a national title with two torn ACLs.

What made the tournament so hard was knowing the magnitude of it is something very few people in the world that would battle through such unimpeachable circumstances and win a national title with two torn ACLs. What made it even harder was hearing the sadness and how hard, Tom Brands said. That is what life is about, and that's what's so beautiful about this sport," Woods said. "This is the kind of stuff you're going to deal with in life. Through any hardship, you're going to continue to grow. That's the fact you need to move on from any hardship, you're going to continue to grow. That's why I think every kid that is here, that it's going to help him move on from this."

"The hard part is having the right look, the right presence in Iowa's practice room to take on more of a mentoring role in his future endeavors and to take on more of a mentorship role. I think he has the potential to be a great leader in this room will be for the squad's future success. Out of the Hawkeyes' 10 national tournament qualifiers, Woods was the only grappler to make it to the championship finals. He fell to Northern Colorado's No. 2 seed Andrew Allen, 8-4.

But Tony Cassioppi finished seventh at 197 pounds, finished seventh. Cassioppi finished seventh at 197 pounds, finished seventh.

"That was a heartbreaking finish for these four individuals who have spent the last six or seven months of their lives fighting for this," Tom Brands said. "But you still have to move on. As easy as it sounds, that's the next step. It seems cruel to say that because the magnitude of it is huge."

Instead of fighting for a medal round and automatically finished sixth at 125 pounds, ending his career with a record of 90-6. This will obviously be Iowa's biggest loss next season — as long as Lee is still around, the Hawkeyes can return to the NCAA podium next season — as long as Lee is still around, the Hawkeyes can return to the NCAA podium next season — as long as Lee is still around, the Hawkeyes can return to the NCAA podium next season — as long as Lee is still around, the Hawkeyes can return to the NCAA podium next season. UI students, celebrities take on IC stand-up scene

Stand-up comedy in Iowa City includes open mic nights, theatrical showcases, and a comic legend’s national tour.

Whether it’s open mic, professional stand-up roo- tions, or “late-Errors,” Iowa City makes room for laughter. Although several lo- cations host established comedians, comedy sports teams, and famous visitors. But a lot of comics or anyone looking to throw some one-liners at am. Joystick Comedy Arcade specializes as a venue for comedy. The bar’s Tuesday night open mic started at the Iowa City Yacht Club before moving to Joystick in September 2021. Now, the venue has two open spots on Sunday and Thursday at 9 p.m. Joystick’s headline acts every Friday and Saturday.

Thursday’s “open mic” is the "Cone- open mic in the first half, and the lineup for the second half is "the night. "Bill & Ed" is hosted by Thane Cullas, a local comedian and Joystick and an executive producer for the Floodwater Comedy Festival. Cullas wrote in an email to The Daily Iowan that Joystick’s influence on the comedy scene has reached beyond Iowa City, growing the genre of stand-up comedy. "It’s helped give comedians more stage time, a half-hour for others to learn about the art of stand-up comedy. It’s gotten better. Stand-up is all about practice. Comedy is a muscle that constantly needs nurturing. "If you do two open mics a week for comedy, it’s not going to go anywhere." Joystick will host a “Best of Iowa” showcase on March 11 and two more stand-up specials in April, where leg- endary Iowa comic Dennis Townsend and Al Geil will headline. In addition to venues like Joystick, the Iowa City stand-up comedy scene is furthered by telethons and live shows from comedy venues like Willow Creek Theatre. Willie Creek hosts "местный Stand-up"—a spin-off, DIY comedy showcase—in collaboration with arts organization Public Space One. Logan Pratt, a senior at the University of Iowa majoring in marketing with a minor in theatre, is the current host of Joystick comedy. He will also serve as the executive producer for the upcoming Floodwater Comedy Festival. Pratt said he was always interested in starting something up and got involved after talking to the Standup Comed- dy Practicum class at the university. "I asked the chair, the professor, and playwright Megan Gogerty, "What can I do with the bar to help you to perform stand-up?"

"It really taught me what it means to be a comedian, a real comedian, like how to get up there. It was a very detailed score of "How to do it properly," Pratt said. "The chair taught you how to be like a working stand-up comedian, and also, how to think about it, and how to think of your set, and how you’re thinking, and how your brain is working."

Pratt’s current material usually focuses on travel and taking advice from Go- geter’s comics that he’s been watching. "It’s self rather than someone else’s material. It may not be as enjoyable as someone’s own material. Pratt also said he does a lot as having a good time, but he wants the audience to get to know this funny new comedian. "He’s got his own style. He’s got his own brand. He’s got his own set of jokes."

"It’s really taught me how to be a comedian," Pratt said. "The chair taught you how to be a real comedian, like how to a real comedian, like how to be a real comedian, like how to perform stand-up."

The prize was a college scholarship, but Pratt also said he was nervous. "I was scared of people who have seen it before, I hope they’re satisfied with the new set."
