McDermott library ramps up security

GAROUSH CHEN
Mercury Staff

McDermott Library implemented a new and improved system on Aug. 28, requiring students and staff to scan their Comet Card before entering and exiting to improve building security.

At the end of spring 2023, the library opened a new entrance near their Comer Card kiosks, and students, staff and visitors began using this new entrance to the library.

The system requires students to scan their Comet Card upon entering and exiting. Cognitive science sophomore Vidhi Safley said, "I think it definitely makes me feel better that actual people are using it".

Before implementing security in August, the library utilized a card system that added more student and staff control, but was not as effective in preventing theft and vandalism.

The system requires students to scan their Comet Card upon entering and exiting. Cognitive science sophomore Vidhi Safley said, "I think it definitely makes me feel better that actual people are using it".

Before implementing security in August, the library utilized a card system that added more student and staff control, but was not as effective in preventing theft and vandalism.

The system requires students to scan their Comet Card upon entering and exiting. Cognitive science sophomore Vidhi Safley said, "I think it definitely makes me feel better that actual people are using it".

Before implementing security in August, the library utilized a card system that added more student and staff control, but was not as effective in preventing theft and vandalism.

Before implementing security in August, the library utilized a card system that added more student and staff control, but was not as effective in preventing theft and vandalism.

Before implementing security in August, the library utilized a card system that added more student and staff control, but was not as effective in preventing theft and vandalism.